- 6. Back in Canton, he retained his old rank as postmaster of a first-class office but found the inequality of remmeration between old civil service men and party youngsters even more glaring and his subordinates even more defiant. He realized his days were over in mainland China and his resignation was accepted. His application for a persit to leave for Hongkong was granted on condition of his solemn written promise not to talk against the People's Government.
- 7. He arrived in Hongkong in early August 1953 and has remained quiet except when with his closest relatives.
